It has been acknowledged that the soul of a man can be reflected and recorded in his art. The art of expression is, in itself, an ability innate to the artist. To be able to portray deep emotion through a piece of art is a direct communication from the soul. Many times we need to have that communication in order to feel more alive.

We need the energy of art to keep us going. It is very important for a civilization to have enough art to create a strong force of positive energy towards its population. A civilization cannot flourish and prosper without enough creation and art.

My goal as an artist is to help to create a new and better civilization.

Lore Eckelberry is an international contemporary artist located in Los Angeles, California. Her paintings are featured in galleries and private collections throughout the United States, Japan, England, Germany, Spain, Korea, Hawaii, Canada, Mexico, as well as a contemporary museum in Japan.

Her love of travel and her curiosity about other cultures led her to visit Canada, Japan, China, France, Holland, and Italy (where she lived for some time).

Lore is a self-taught artist and her style went from early 20th century inspiration into totally contemporary work. Lore's spontaneous, explosive paintings exude the artist's love of expression of strong emotions. Lore's emphasis on color creates a strong and completely modern and innovative way of expressing art.
